My name is Perry Lambson, I'm seventeen, the high school I am graduating from promotes creativity, school is once a week and is fairly independent based learning, allowed me to grow my day trading account and work at a family restaurant without struggles. Each school day I would speak with my principal(John is what everyone calls him) about business and finance( My favorite subjects) and we would share insights with one another. Ever since my freshman year I have moved around from school to school, however I have been growing my brokerage account to a point where I can successfully make a living and live abroad. I disagree with college immensely and would like that to be in the speech, strongly believing in many alternatives but at the same time not discrediting formal education. After turning 18 I intend to live and work abroad.

There are two other graduates besides myself, both have to give a small speech as well. I would like the speech to include that I could give many individuals thanks such as my mother for supporting me through everything, and my a brother I could trust, without each and everyone I would not be who I am today, etc. Including advice to those coming after is required which is why I wanted to provide a quote from Robert De Niro in his movie The Score, "Make a list of everything you want now and spend the next twenty five years getting it, slowly, piece by piece.", in addition to that quote I would to reassure many teenagers in the audience that they don't need to feel stuck following one path, their are always alternatives. If you believe that a theme would go well with this speech please feel free to add your own creativity into it.
